i laid there like a lover
your lover
not mine
avoiding avoiding your eyes opening me up wide dropping
me
in exposed, they close

peeling myself from beneath your grasp i check a constant breath i twist my mind and then my body
loose
and i laugh at myself in the mirror third time nearly a charm
the floor creaks
loudly
as it has for every would be lover as they sneak away
as i snuck away
myself

you wake up and remind me i go and remember the sunrise framed
in a second story window a framed degree hangs on my wall, and somehow it shows that i am "learned." that i know what i'm talking about.

but how can it possibly show all the work, all the stress, all the tears?
all the times that i wanted to quit, all the triumphs of four years?

four years - i'm not the same.
success doesn't fit in a frame.

a framed picture from SST sits on my desk, and somehow it shows that i am "cultured." that i know what the world is like.

but how can it possibly show
all that i had to endure?
and how a family i didn't even know, showed me a love entirely pure?

three months - i'm not the same.
love doesn't fit in a frame.

a framed picture of my sisters sits on my shelf, and somehow it shows that i am loved.
that i'm part of a family.

but how can it possibly show
all that we've had to do? all the trials that we've had to face, all the struggles that we've come through?

twenty-two years - i'm not the same.
life doesn't fit in a frame.
